

Enabling energy security in a profoundly changing world

Neil Greet
July 2024

A growing and urgent call

A global energy transformation is occurring which will manifest itself differently across the world. It is in Australia's national interest that the transformation be understood, then progressed while avoiding unintended consequences. Energy security underpins an orderly and just energy transition for all Australians.

In 2014, Engineers Australia published a report Energy Security for Australia: Crafting a comprehensive energy security policy. It is now a decade on and timely for Engineers Australia to re-examine energy security as part of a series on energy transition. In the 2014 policy statement, Engineers Australia called for "a comprehensive understanding of energy security that explicitly recognises both sides of the demand-supply relationship". It recognised that energy insecurities arise across the four key domains of:

- economic security and national security
