

Socio-economic Issues in The Time Machine

✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

Herbert George Wells, a prominent English writer, published his The Time Machine in 1895. At that time, the writer was 29 years old, and probably already had his outlook and ideas about the human race existence formed. During his student years, Wells studied biology and economics, and was making a research related to the theory of evolution (Hammond 15).

These spheres of interest determined the issues risen in the young man's science fiction. The ideas expressed in The Time Machine were most likely inspired by Wells' several months stay in Uppark, a XVII-century estate with preserved interior and traditions of the century, which created an illusion of a trip back in time (Hammond 6).

In addition, the writer's ideas were influenced by works of Swift, Voltaire, Plato, and others. The Time Machine is one of the first science fiction works that appeal to traveling in time, and its socio-economic ideas are still a subject of interest even today.

The first major socio-economic issue discussed in the novella is the distribution of people into social classes. The Eloi and the Morlocks represent bourgeoisie and working class correspondingly in a rather satire and exaggerated way. Indeed, the Eloi do not work, nor are they busy with mental activities; their daily activities, as well as language and way of thinking, are rather primitive.

Moreover, Eloi are helpless without the Morlocks services. At the same time, in spite of the seeming dominance of the Eloi (they live on earth, while the Morlocks live and work underground; the Morlocks serve the Eloi, providing them with clothes), their actual hierarchy gradually switched during the evolution process, as the Morlocks hunt for the Eloi at night and eat them (Wells 36).

This is Wells' way of showing that lack of initiative, work and determination can lead a ruling class to becoming helpless and totally depending on working class. At the same time, lack of education, intelligent work and cultural knowledge (daylight) in the working class can lead its representatives to exhausting and cruel existence, not much different from that of animals.

Protest and the State in Eurasia and West Asia Ms Priya Singh, Ms Anita Sengupta, Ms Suchandana Chatterjee, 2016-08-15 The twenty first century has witnessed disaffection and protest across Eurasia and West Asia triggering debates questioning the state of governance as well as looking at a redefinition of the arc of crisis By and large there have been two major viewpoints one which emphasises the aspect of failed states and the other that focuses on technology as the prime instigator and motivator for the protests Even as the Arab Uprisings are commonly acknowledged as an upshot of a succession of protests as well as the colour revolutions across Eurasia and West Asia the after effects have been incessant with the Maidan in Ukraine and intermittent protests in Turkey The causative factors have been as diverse as climate change and its adverse impact economic inequalities fed by a process of globalisation which caters to certain sections of society social grievances of marginalised sections who feel politically socially or culturally deprived and a general failure to address critical issues in an apt way While the nature of the protests has been as varied as the reaction of authorities to the protest there has been a tendency to review the replication of the protests across states in the region The world today is increasingly observing and partaking in local and global acts of protest and solidarity that entail visual aural and behavioural articulations by demonstrators as effective ways of making claims reclaiming spaces and condemning invasive situations The volume analyses relations between the state and such protests by exploring the construction of protest movements and probing the background nature and specificity of dissent Protest movements and counter movements have been examined and analysed The purpose is to understand and interpret the moments and episodes associated with movements capturing disseminating and transmuting the images and symbols of protest Chapters in the volume enquire about and debate on whether contemporary protesters are consolidating upon and intensifying prior repertoires of dissent

Socioeconomic Democracy Robley E. George, 2002-06-30 George offers a direct and powerful challenge to the fatal shortcomings of virtually all currently dominant economic paradigms including those of capitalism socialism communism and so called mixed economies The alternative socioeconomic democracy and advanced theoretical model in which there is some form of universal guaranteed income as well as a limit to maximum allowable personal wealth combined with a realistic degree of human flexibility based on public choice theory Arguing that such a procedure would allow a society to democratically control the extreme limits of material wealth and poverty the author forecasts that such a system will create strong economic incentives while reducing the present undesirable and expensive social problems associated with the maldistribution of wealth This innovative book will be of interest to scholars and others interested in exploring ways to strengthen democracy while improving economic systems around the world

Three Essays on Family Economic Issues in China Yizhou Chen (Economist), 2021 China has undergone a dramatic transformation in the past half century as its economy has experienced a high speed of growth becoming a more competitive economic system Along with these economic changes family economic circumstances have evolved This dissertation is comprised of three essays examining family economic issues in China including marriage maternal health and maternal employment The first essay is titled An Economic Analysis of Marital Dissolution in China This essay employs data from the 2014 wave of the China Family Panel Study survey adopting a logit model as well as a Cox proportional hazard model to examine the factors important to marital dissolution in China with a focus on the importance of individuals occupations Both models produce similar results concerning the factors that influence divorce probabilities in China The results reveal that occupations are not important determinants of divorce for women but are important for men in particular men working in occupations that confer social status have a lower likelihood of divorce while men working in agriculture have a higher likelihood of divorce The second essay is titled Explaining the Decline in the Maternal Mortality Rate in China from 2002 to 2016 This essay uses a province level fixed effects regression model to explain the recent trend in maternal mortality in China The data are drawn from the National Bureau of Statistics of China published in Statistical Yearbooks on Health Population Employment Agriculture and Environment The results reveal that a higher female illiteracy rate and a higher amount of pesticide usage are associated with a higher maternal mortality rate in China However factors related to modernization or improved female empowerment are associated with lower maternal mortality The third essay is titled The Impact of Child Health and Other Socio Economic Factors on Maternal Employment in China This study employs data from the 2016 wave of the China Family Panel Study survey on married and single mothers and relies on an instrumental variable IV bivariate probit model with a set of instrumental variables parental absence ever breastfed birthweight and medical care expenses for child health The results show that child health is a statistically significant predictor of maternal employment for both married mothers and single mothers of infants as well as older preschool aged children Specifically single and married mothers have higher employment probabilities if their children were recently sick
