Forensic Speaker Identification Tony Brian Alderman, 2005 Semi-Automatic Forensic Speaker Identification, 2004 The Speaker Identification Ability of Blind and Sighted Listeners Almut Braun, 2016-08-12 Almut Braun carried out forensic phonetic speaker identification experiments voice lineups with 306 lay listeners Blind listeners significantly outperformed sighted listeners when the speech recordings were presented in studio quality For recordings in mobile phone quality or of whispering voices blind and sighted listeners achieved similar results The data can be used as reference material for real cases with blind earwitnesses Furthermore it is discussed whether blind individuals are particularly suitable to work as forensic audio analysts for law enforcement agencies

Forensic Speaker Analysis and Identification by Computer Mehrdad Khodai-Joopari, 2006 This thesis advances understanding of the forensic value of the automatic speech parameters by addressing the following question what is the potentiality of the speech cepstrum as a forensic acoustic parameter Despite many advances in automatic speech and speaker recognition robust and unconstrained progress in technical forensic speaker identification has been partly impeded by our incomplete understanding of the interaction and relation between forensic phonetics and the techniques employed in state of the art automatic speech and speaker recognition The posed question underlies the recurrent and longstanding issue of acoustic parameterisation in the area of forensic phonetics where 1 speaker identification often must be carried out under less than optimal conditions and 2 views differ on the usefulness and trustworthiness of the formant frequency measurements To this end a new formulation for the forensic evaluation of speech data was derived which is effectively a spectral likelihood ratio with enhanced sensitivity to the local peaks of the formant structure of the speech spectrum of vowel sounds while retaining the characteristics of the Bayesian framework This new hybrid formula was used together with a novel approach which is founded on a statistically based matched pairs technique to account for various levels of variation inherent in speech recordings thereby providing a spectrally meaningful measure of variations between two speech spectra and hence the true worth of speech samples as forensic evidence The experimental results are obtained based on a forensically realistic database of a relatively large population of 297 native speakers of Japanese In sum the research conducted in this thesis is a major step forward in advancing the forensic phonetic field which broadens the objective basis of the forensic speaker identification Beyond advancing knowledge in the field the semi data independent nature of the new formula ultimately has great implications in technical forensic speaker identification It also provides us with a valuable biometric tool with both academic and commercial potential in crime investigation in a field which is already suffering from the lack of adequate data

Study of Speaker Recognition Viprav Gautam, Saurabh Sharma, 2013 Speaker Recognition is the computing task of validating a user's claimed identity using characteristics extracted from their voices This technique is one of the most useful and popular biometric recognition techniques in the world especially related to areas in which security is a major concern It can be used for authentication surveillance forensic speaker recognition and a number of related activities It can be divided into Speaker Identification and Speaker Verification Speaker identification determines which registered speaker provides a given utterance from amongst a set of known speakers Speaker verification accepts or rejects the identity claim of a speaker is the speaker the person they say they are
