Winners and Losers Over Two Centuries of Globalization Jeffrey G. Williamson, 2002 The world has seen two globalization booms over the past two centuries and one bust The first global century ended with World War I and the second started at the end of World War II while the years in between were ones of anti global backlash This lecture reports what we know about the winners and losers during the two global centuries including aspects almost always ignored in modern debate how prices of consumption goods on the expenditure side are affected and how the economic position of the poor is influenced It also reports two responses of the winners to the losers complaints Some concessions to the losers took the form of anti global policy manifested by immigration restriction in the high wage countries and trade restriction pretty much everywhere Some concessions to the losers were also manifested by a race towards the top whereby legislation strengthened losers safety nets and increased their sense of political participation The lecture concludes with four lessons of history and an agenda for international economists including more attention to the impact of globalization on commodity price structure the causes of protection the impact of world migration on poverty eradication and the role of political participation in the whole process Kraus' Recreation & Leisure in Modern Society Mclean, Amy R. Tax Competition and Trade Protection Eckhard Janeba, John Douglas Wilson, 1999 This paper reconsiders the question of whether tax competition for mobile capital leads to tax rates on capital that are too low or too high from the combined viewpoint of the competing regions or countries in an economic union In contrast to standard models of tax competition both commodity trade and capital mobility is allowed to occur between the competing regions and the rest of the world A key result of the analysis is that whether the capital taxes are too low or high depends on the degree of external trade protection When the country s central government is free to set the tariff tax competition leads to inefficiently low tax rates But in the absence of a tariff tax rates can be too high In particular regions may choose to subsidize capital in equilibrium as a means of inducing favorable terms of trade effects but the subsidy i e a negative tax will then be too low because an increase in a single region s subsidy benefits other regions by reducing their relative quantities of subsidized capital These results are discussed in the context of the European Union s Single Market where non EU firms have responded to the Fortress of Europe by increasing foreign direct investment

The Effect of Marginal Tax Rates on

Income Emmanuel Saez,1999 This paper uses a panel of individual tax returns and the bracket creep as source of tax rate variation to construct instrumental variables estimates of the sensitivity of income to changes in tax rates From 1979 to 1981 the US income tax schedule was fixed in nominal terms while inflation was high around 10% This produced a real change in tax rate schedules Taxpayers near the top end of a tax bracket were more likely to creep to a higher bracket and thus experience a rise in marginal rates the following year than the other taxpayers Compensated elasticities can be estimated by comparing the differences in changes in income between taxpayers close to the top end of a tax bracket to the other taxpayers These estimates based on comparisons between very similar groups are robust to underlying changes in the income distribution such as a rise in inequality The elasticities found are higher than those derived in labor supply studies but smaller than those found previously with the same kind of tax returns data Business Week ,2006 The Effect of Health on Economic Growth David E. Bloom,David Canning,Jaypee Sevilla,2001 Macroeconomists acknowledge the contribution of human capital to economic growth but their empirical studies define human capital solely in terms of schooling In this paper we extend production function models of economic growth to account for two additional variables that microeconomists have identified as fundamental components of human capital work experience and health Our main result is that good health has a positive sizable and statistically significant effect on aggregate output We find little variation across countries in average work experience thus differentials in work experience account for little variation in rates of economic growth Finally we find that the effects of average schooling on national output are consistent with microeconomic estimates of the effects of individual schooling on earnings suggesting that education creates no discernible externalities Papers and Proceedings of the Royal Society of Tasmania Royal Society of Tasmania,2005 Vols for 1878 1879 1881 1884 contain List of fellows and members Vertical File Index ,2005 The OECD Observer Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development,2006 The International Macroeconomics of Taxation and the Case Against European Tax Harmonization Enrique G. Mendoza,2001 The theory of international macroeconomics shows that domestic tax policy in a global economy affects foreign economic conditions via complex dynamic interactions through relative prices tax revenues and wealth distribution This paper proposes a tractable quantitative framework for assessing tax policies that is consistent with this theory The significance of the international transmission channels of tax policy is evaluated in the context of a workhorse two country dynamic general equilibrium model The model is used to assess the potential effects of the European harmonization of capital income taxes The results show that this policy if enacted along the lines followed in harmonizing value added taxes yields large capital outflows and a significant erosion of tax revenue for Continental Europe while the opposite effects benefit the United Kingdom Welfare in the United Kingdom rises as result while Continental Europe may incur a substantial welfare cost
