Molecular Modeling and Multiscaling Issues for Electronic Material Applications Artur Wymyslowski, Nancy Iwamoto, Matthew Yuen, Haibo Fan, 2014-11-20 This book offers readers a snapshot of the progression of molecular modeling in the electronics industry and how molecular modeling is currently being used to understand materials to solve relevant issues in this field The reader is introduced to the evolving role of molecular modeling especially seen from the perspective of the IEEE community and modeling in electronics This book also covers the aspects of molecular modeling needed to understand the relationship between structures and mechanical performance of materials The authors also discuss the transitional topic of multiscale modeling and recent developments on the atomistic scale and current attempts to reach the submicron scale as well as the role that quantum mechanics can play in performance prediction Electronic Packaging Materials Science X: Volume 515 Daniel J. Belton, 1998-10 Proceedings of the April 1998 symposium which focused on high density package solutions with an emphasis on flip chip technology Topics include interfacial adhesion behavior flip chip interconnections high density substrates thermomechanical behavior and packaging reliability issues Articles address the fracture of polymer interfaces and the delamination tendencies seen with flip chip interconnections on organic substrates under bump metallurgy issues and overall reliability issues Annotation copyrighted by Book News Inc Portland OR Composite Materials for Electronic Functions Deborah D. L. Chung, 2000 Composite materials are traditionally designed for the mechanical properties due to their structural applications However composite materials are increasingly used in non structural applications such as electronic packaging and thermal management Moreover structural composite materials that are multifunctional are increasingly needed due to the demand of smart structures and the importance of weight saving As a consequence structural materials that can provide electronic functions are needed Thus electronic functions are desirable for both non structural and structural composite materials
