Domestic Politics Global Climate Change:

The Domestic Politics of Global Climate Change Guri Bang, Arild Underdal, teinar Andresen, 2015-09-25 Why are some countries more willing and able than others to engage in climate change mitigation The Domestic Politics of Global Climate Change compiles insights from experts in comparative politics and international relations to describe and explain climate policy trajectories of seven key actors Brazil China the European Union India Japan Russia and the United States Using a common conceptual framework the authors find that ambitious climate policy change is limited by stable material parameters and that governmental supply of mitigation policies meet or even exceed societal demand in most cases Given the important roles that the seven actors play in addressing global climate change the book s in depth comparative analysis will help readers assess the prospects for a new and more effective international climate agreement for 2020 and beyond

National Governance and the Global Climate Change Regime Dana Fisher, 2004-06 How do domestic interests affect international policymaking What is the role of the nation state within multilateral regimes How can we understand the diversity of state responses to the internationalization of environmental regulation National Governance and the Global Climate Change Regime compares the roles of different actors and institutions in international environmental policymaking It focuses on the formation of a legally binding treaty to reduce greenhouse gases the Kyoto Protocol to show how domestic interests affect international treaty negotiations Dana Fisher combines quantitative analysis of social economic and environmental data for the member states of the OECD with qualitative case studies of three key countries the United States Japan and the Netherlands She argues compellingly that domestic debates within states and subsequent national policy formation have a significantly larger role in international environmental regime formation than many scholars recognize

1980s climate change appeared on the agenda in international politics³ but only since the end of the Cold War the climate change debate has shifted into the focus of concern in foreign policy circles⁴ until it was swept away by an omnipresent War on Terror after September 11 The United States as the world's largest polluter⁵ to climate change US emissions of CO₂ exceed those of all other countries⁶ plus on a per capita basis US CO₂ emissions are the highest of all countries⁷ plays a major if not the decisive role in international environmental politics and the dialogue for a global strategy to address climate change While the United States was one of the leading countries in terms of progressive domestic legislation and one of the driving forces behind international environmental agreements e.g. dealing with the problem of ozone depletion culminating in the Montreal Protocol⁸ the US is now not only blocking the Kyoto Protocol but also actively pressuring other undecided countries not to sign and ratify the Protocol Paradoxically American scientists have played a leading role in identifying the anthropogenic affect on global warming and its dangerous consequences yet political commitment and leadership to address the climate change problem is very weak American foreign policy especially with regards to climate change can only be explained by a myriad of factors ranging from concerns for national interests and the influence of domestic politics to the ability of exercising leadership
