Education Regulations:
Roadblocks to Student Choice in Higher Education Committee On Un-American Activities U.S. House of Representatives, 2012-07-04 The Higher Education Act states that in order to receive Title IV funding programs at proprietary colleges must prepare students for gainful employment in a recognized occupation Congress has purposely never defined the term gainful employment despite its presence in the statute for the past 50 years It was decided that any attempt to define such an evolving concept could have unintended consequences However some in the administration seem to believe they know better than Congress Last year the Department of Education issued a new regulation that attempts for the first time to define gainful employment

Education Regulations US House of Representatives. Committee on Education and the Workforce, 2011 This paper presents the fourth Committee on Education and the Workforce hearing on the federal rules and regulations that undermine the strength of this nation s education system Congress has purposely never defined the term gainful employment despite its presence in the statute for the past 50 years It was decided that any attempt to define such an evolving concept could have unintended consequences However some in the administration seem to believe they know better than Congress Last year the Department of Education issued a new regulation that attempts for the first time to define gainful employment Under the regulation proprietary colleges would be required to seek pre approval from the federal government before creating new programs and adhere to a confusing formula that utilizes the debt to income ratio and loan repayment rates of program graduates to determine eligibility for federal student aid Additionally these institutions would face a host of new and unprecedented reporting requirements This gainful employment regulation is yet another example of federal overreach into the nation s colleges and universities that will reduce access to higher education for millions of students undercut efforts to re energize the economy and frankly destroy jobs Members testifying before the committee were Honorable Joseph J Heck a Representative in Congress from the State of Nevada Honorable John Kline Committee on Education and the Workforce and
