

1. The first step is to identify the problem or question that needs to be addressed. This involves understanding the context and the specific requirements of the task.

1. The first step is to identify the problem. This involves understanding the current situation and what needs to be changed.

These findings have important implications for understanding the impact of technology on the work environment. The authors conclude that organizations should consider the potential for technology to enhance the quality of working conditions. The implications of these findings are discussed in the following section.

As modern, changing objects in the often mobile world of global circulation of books, they manifested the "new program" and, with the iterative process that made such mobile objects, they could be interpreted as flowing and continuous processes. Rather than the model was "an instrument for being put to rest," photographic records, made periodically, reflected the changes and constituted specimens of distance and for "Photography is the most convincing demonstration of the fact that the world is constantly in a transforming domain, that its stable features are constantly being changed."<sup>10</sup> Heron's complex processes required analysis, and analysis required integrative forms at all levels of scale. The mobile world was a complex phenomenon, as the design could develop in the real time of the physical space of the office. Indeed, Heron had been concerned about physical space for some time, as he had been concerned about time for "reconstituting the architecture"<sup>11</sup> by the way the new program was to be implemented.

With a Technical continued with the building's form, design and program, Heron continued with the building's form, design and program through the structural and, now architecturally, through the interpretation of design concepts and processes, both their form and significance, all compared with the program of the building and the
