Global Environmental Change Karl W. Steininger, Mario Cogoy, 2006 The international community is increasingly confronted with global environmental problems which lead to distributional conflicts unresolved equity issues and asymmetric distribution of the costs and benefits of environmental policy The complexity of such problems requires the development of an international institutional framework capable of coping with the long run international aspects of global environmental change This book analyses some of the difficulties in the construction of such a framework and offers suggestions on how they might be overcome The contributions in The Economics of Global Environmental Change address international trade land use change biodiversity preservation the management of water resources and the composition of water related conflicts global warming and strategic aspects of international environmental agreements This book provides an in depth insight to the current state of the art for both economists and non economists interested in global environmental change It will also be of great interest to those wanting an introduction to the economic perspective of an increasingly relevant environmental core problem as well as to students and researchers in political science

Steven Kelman, 1981-09-30 Sets forth in a straightforward and sensible way the philosophical reasons for the non economist s skepticism of the economist s view of the world Its relevance extends beyond environmental issues to other areas where microeconomic theory is being applied to public policy Kelman cites results to confirm his view that both opponents and supporters of economic incentives have important philosophical concerns He takes the role of an advocate of the use of incentives in formulating an environmental policy He also discusses political strategy from the point of view of the policy entrepreneur who is trying to get ideas adopted Economists and non economists alike will welcome this book as a bridge over a perceptual gap in an important area of policymaking
